Computational Creativity Symposium

This symposium aims to bring together researchers to discuss the question of what it means for computers to model creative behaviour, or indeed to behave themselves in a way that might be considered creative. In addition to the description of computational approaches to generating creative output in a variety of domains, we will be considering the evaluation of computational creativity, both in terms of process and product, as well as the computational assessment of the creativity of other human and digital agents.